Once upon a time, there were five foolish men living together. They shared everything.

One day, they ran out of food. They called a meeting. "Where will our next meal come from?" one of them asked.

There was no easy answer to this question because they had no money and no friends in the community.

After thinking for a few seconds, one of them said "Let's get going!" The second person asked, "Where?"

The third person said, "To steal food." The fourth one said, "Won't we get caught?" The fifth person said, "Don't worry about that!"

The five men went to the market to steal something to eat.

As soon as they started stealing, they were caught!

The five men were taken to the police station.

During the investigation, the police asked, "Whose idea was it to steal food?"

The men started whispering among themselves. Then they told the police how it happened.

The first person said, "I only suggested leaving, not stealing." The second person said, "I was curious about where we were going."

The third person said, "We all agreed to look for food."

The fourth person said, "I warned all of us that we're going to be caught."

And the fifth person said, "We all know we are thieves, and that's why I said, 'Don't worry about it'."

After hearing this, the police understood that all five men were involved in theft.

The police officer concluded, "It is a good idea to share everything, except bad ideas!"
